Mason Transit Awards Vans to Two Local Nonprofits

Agencies that respond to emergency situations will be able to help more people this year, thanks to two donated vans from Mason Transit Authority.

The transit agency selected Mason County Search and Rescue and Turning Pointe Survivor Advocacy Center to receive the two 2006 Ford Econoline 12-passenger vans.

“These groups provide such vital services to the community. We’re pleased to enhance the important work they do, especially in challenging circumstances,” said Amy Asher, Mason Transit general manager.

Mason County Search and Rescue anticipates using its van for nearly 4,200 passenger trips this year. Volunteer search teams will travel to and from search sites, travel to basecamps for emergency assignments and ride together to training sessions. Usually volunteers drive their own vehicles to a search, which could generate 50 cars or more.

The donated van replaces a 1991 transit bus and will tow the group’s new operations trailer. Search and Rescue works closely with the Mason County Sheriff and also will use the van for welfare checks, evidence searches and evacuations.

Turning Pointe Survivor Advocacy Center serves survivors of domestic violence and sexual assault. Often half of the residents at the shelter are under age 18. Turning Pointe will use the van to safely transport people to and from the shelter, sometimes in emergency situations. The van also will help staff pick up donations and supplies to benefit residents.

The van gives Turning Pointe the chance to schedule weekly outings for residents—especially youth. Going to the library or nature trails would provide a sense of normalcy residents often aren’t able to experience.
